BRUNNBY CHURCH

The church was built in the 1100s in the Romanesque style, with nave and the chancel. Brunnby takes its name from the source, located about 200 meters south of the church which in the Middle Ages sprang up and formed a broad stream of running water all year round. During the 1400's the tower, the south porch and the north transept was built. Vault was opened, and in these were murals. Several of those are still well preserved.

S:T PETRI KYRKA

A few lines from Bishop Lindström's inaugural speech: "This church makes no attempt to resemble churches of the past. It is something completely new". The ceiling is arched in a series of waves, symbolizing man's spiritual life as a rolling motion. Lighting and lighting in the church is sparse. Too much natural light destroys the mood of the church according to the architect. Therefore, the lights are constantly lit when service is in progress. Architect Lewerentz wanted to create a soft and warm environment with serenity and devotion.
